Abstract:--

The purpose of this study was to explore the level of perception of the freshmen students towards the enhancement of critical thinking on computer games at Sulu State College. Employed was descriptive exploratory in nature. Using purposive random sampling technique, one hundred (100) freshmen student-respondents were drawn among the five (5) major Departments of Sulu State College. The findings revealed that: On Demographic Profile of the Freshmen Student-respondents: The results of the study found that majority of the students are between 19-21 years old and only 5 are 25 years old and above. On the Level of Perception of Students towards the Enhancement of Critical Thinking on Computer Games: The students are undecided on their perceptions towards the enhancement of critical thinking on Computer Games at Sulu State College. On the Difference on Perception of the students when categorized according to profile: There is no significant difference on the student's perception when they are categorized according to age, gender, and average family income. Thus, student's indecision towards the enhancement of critical thinking on computer games could only mean that most of them are not so much engaged on computer games either in school or at home considering their economic status.
