“Exploring Study Habits of Nursing Students toward Learning English Language in Sulu State College”

The efficient and effective way of learning depends largely on study habits of the students and gradually influence their academic achievements. The Purpose of this study is to discover the study habits of nursing students in learning the English Language. Both qualitative and descriptive methods were used in this study. First, the students were interviewed their study habits and then the researcher put it into a questionnaire checklist. Using the SPSS, the study found that majority of the students answered that English fluency is important in the nursing professions especially when you go abroad. However, majority also answered that it is hard to speak the English language.
